Boston, MA (For Release 08.05.22) — Hailed by The New York Times as “one of the nation’s most intriguing opera companies,” Odyssey Opera returns to live performance with TROIKA, a concert performance of the complete operatic output of Sergei Rachmaninoff. Though Rachmaninoff is one of the most beloved Russian composers, no American company has ever showcased Rachmaninoff’s trio of one-act operas—Aleko, The Miserly Knight, and Francesca da Rimini—in a single evening. Inspired by timeless tales by Alexander Pushkin and Dante’s Inferno, all three works demonstrate Rachmaninoff’s gift for yearning melodies, as well as his mastery of orchestral color and drama. The cast line-up includes two Ukrainian-born singers—soprano Yelena Dyacheck and baritone Aleksey Bogdanov—along with Armenian tenor Yeghishe Manucharyan, American tenors Andrew Bidlack and Spencer Hamlin, Russian bass Mikhail Svetlov, and American bass Kevin Thompson.

“Rachmaninoff’s music is a spectacular way to return to live performance,” says Artistic and General Director Gil Rose. “Though he devoted most of his attention to a career as a piano and orchestral composer, his operatic output was equally impressive. Odyssey Opera hopes to provide long overdue exposure of Rachmaninoff’s operatic works to American audiences.”

The evening begins with Aleko, the first of three completed operas by Rachmaninoff. The Russian libretto, written by Vladimir Nemirovich-Danchenko, is an adaptation of Alexander Pushkin’s poem The Gypsies. The opera recounts the wrenching love story of the exiled Aleko and the free-spirited Zemfira. Written in 1892 by a 19-year-old Rachmaninoff as a graduation work at the Moscow Conservatory, Aleko won the Conservatory’s gold medal for composition that year.

Completing the trilogy are two operas that Rachmaninoff completed relatively early in his career: The Miserly Knight and Francesca da Rimini. Both premiered in 1906 in Moscow in a double-bill performance, with the composer himself conducting. Based on Pushkin’s tragic drama of the same name, The Miserly Knight is an intense, one-hour psychological study of monetary obsession and alienation featuring five male singers. Mikhail Svetlov takes up the lead role as the Baron, while tenor Spencer Hamlin returns to Odyssey Opera to portray the Baron’s son.

Francesca da Rimini turns the story of Canto V from Dante's Inferno into a "symphonic opera," as described by the composer himself. For this Odyssey Opera production, Yeghishe Manucharyan plays the role of the poet Dante who meets two young lovers —Francesca, played by Yelena Dyacheck, and Paolo, played by Andrew Bidlack— who are murdered and consigned to the Second Circle of Hell after a stolen kiss.
